POLITICAL RELATIONS BETWEEN PORTUGAL AND SOUTH AFRICA FROM THE END OF THE SECOND WORLD WAR UNTIL 1974

PAULO EMANUEL SPRANGER LOBATO DE FREITAS CORREIA
POLITICAL RELATIONS BETWEEN PORTUGAL AND SOUTH AFRICA FROM THE END OF THE SECOND WORLD WAR UNTIL 1974

By

Paulo Emanuel Spranger Lobato de Freitas Correia

Thesis submitted in fulfillment of the requirements for the degree of

Doctorate of Literature and Philosophy

in

HISTORY

in the

FACULTY OF HUMANITIES

at the

UNIVERSITY OF JOHANNESBURG

Supervisor: Prof. L. Gründlingh
Co-supervisor: Prof. G. Verhoef

October 2007
TABLE OF CONTENTS

Acknowledgements.............................................................................................................. i
Summary............................................................................................................................. iii
List of Acronyms................................................................................................................ v

INTRODUCTION
a) The aim of this study ........................................................................................................ 1
b) The structure of this thesis .............................................................................................. 7
c) Historiography.................................................................................................................. 10
d) Sources used in this thesis ............................................................................................ 16

CHAPTER ONE
South Africa and Portugal from the end of the Second World War until 1960

Introduction
a) A brief analysis of Portuguese-South African relations before the early 1950s.................. 25
b) The official Portuguese view of race relations and South African perceptions of the system of assimilation in Portugal’s African possessions................................................................. 38
c) South Africa’s support for the Portuguese cause in India........................................... 49
d) The emergence of a common front in the international sphere...................................... 54

Conclusion
CHAPTER TWO

Portuguese-South African relations from 1960 until 1965

Introduction

a) The start of the insurgency wars in Portugal’s African territories during the early 1960s................................................................. 73

b) White South Africa’s perceptions of the instability in the Portuguese-controlled territories and other parts of the African continent................................. 84

c) External pressure and the informal alliance between South Africa and Portugal......................................................................................... 90

d) Closer cooperation in intelligence, military communications and logistics.........................................................................................99

Conclusion

CHAPTER THREE

Portuguese and South African interaction between 1965 and 1970

Introduction

a) Portugal’s military activities on the African continent since the mid-1960s.........................................................................................123

b) South Africa’s view of the Portuguese military effort in Africa...................... 133
c) South Africa’s secret support for Portugal’s military effort in Angola.......... 141

d) Portuguese disappointment with South Africa’s secret loan concession..... 152

e) Portuguese reaction to South African overt aid...................................... 162

Conclusion

CHAPTER FOUR
The final years of Portuguese rule in Africa

Introduction

a) The Portuguese under increasing pressure in Africa and on mainland Portugal................................................................. 190

b) The importance of the Portuguese military shield for South Africa................................................................. 201

c) Joint counter-insurgency planning in Southern Africa......................... 208

d) The final phase of Portuguese-South African cooperation............... 217

Conclusion

CONCLUSION......................................................................................... 243

BIBLIOGRAPHY...................................................................................... 260